Jesus Manyaret Sparbraugh was truly a "Mother in Israel." Her ille was a blessing to all within the hallowed circle of her influence, and left its holy impress on the hearts and minds of her children and grand-children. Just a little while Absalom Scarbrough lingered behind. He was a man of noble character and sterling worth—an earnest christian, a model husband and father, a fathful friend, and silwars and everywhere a man above reproach. The death of his wife left his mind shrouded by a sorrow whose pail the hands of love and care could never lit amain. The light of life was gone, and his one wish was to go to those who would return to him no more forever. God, in His merey, answered the prayor: It was "enough," and he sleeps in Jesus. In the closingdays of 1879 again the unerting archer draws his fatal bow and John G. Scarbrough is numbered with the dead Less than a year before he had left the old home in Fayette county and moved, to Texas. There he established a business hat prantised success, and soon found friends, even among strangers, the was a man of the type we rarely see. His word was as binding as an oath, his promise was his bond, and he would have yielded his life sooner than forfeit cither. His ideas of truth, honor and justice amounted almat to eccentricity. He did not offer his friendship promise counsly, but once given it was without a finw, a rock of refrege and eternal. A sad young wife and three little children live to mourn his loss and emulate his example. I turn again to the subject of this memoir, and feel how poor indeed is any offering of mine to the sacred memory of this christian gentleman. The nie of A. M. Scarbrough was without spot or blemish. By energy, industry a diperseverance he ascended the plane of human prosperity. Starting at its base, he gained its summit. But far better than this, in his heart were stored the true richez or grace. He was a child of God, lived above reproach, deed triumphant, and
